INTRODUCTION.

THE last eight years of the eventful reign of William III. saw some striking changes in the British Standing Army. The large augmentation to the military establishment which took place in the spring of 1694 (Vol. III. pp. xx, xxi) only held good until the autumn of 1697, when the Treaty of Ryswick afforded Parliament an excellent excuse for reducing the British forces. Whole regiments were disbanded, and those corps which were allowed to exist on sufferance were pruned down to what was considered an adequate peace strength. In less than four years after this wholesale dispersion of seasoned veterans, who had learnt the art of war under Schomberg, under Marlborough and under William III., the tocsin of war once more resounded through the British Isles, and there was a general call to arms. It was chiefly owing to the popularity of a war with France that many hundreds of officers, and men, who had fought in King William's campaigns, joined the newly-raised regiments, thereby adding a leavening of drill and discipline, to what might otherwise have been raw levies, which had to take the field against the best trained troops in Europe.

A joint naval and military expedition, under the command of Lieut.-General Tollemache, was launched against Brest the first week in June 1694. The landing of the troops in Camaret Bay was attended with great loss of life, the enemy, who were in great force, having been forewarned of the approach of the British squadron. Batteries, the existence of which were unknown to the invaders, swept the decks of the incoming fleet and mowed down the troops who attempted to land in open boats. The soldiers were re-embarked with great difficulty, leaving, besides killed and wounded, many prisoners in the hands of the French. General Tollemache was mortally wounded, and among the prisoners taken on this occasion was a whole company of the 13th Foot with their captain.* The squadron returned to St. Helen's but put to sea again, on 5th July, and the artillery train serving on board the fleet bombarded Dieppe and Havre de Grace with good effect, but failed before Dunkirk and Calais (pp. 17-18).

Whilst these events were transpiring at sea the allied army in Flanders had taken the field. The campaign promised to be an eventful one, but Marshal Luxembourg was disinclined to try conclusions with an army fully equal to his own. Beyond much marching and counter-marching, nothing great was attempted, or effected, except the taking of Huy, which fortress surrendered to the Allies in September 1694. The train of British artillery (pp. 15, 16) served at this siege, and 120 pieces of cannon were employed. In the following June the Allies invested Namur, which was then considered the strongest fortress in Europe and believed by Vauban, who had constructed some of its most recent outworks, to be almost impregnable. The garrison consisted of nineteen battalions of foot, eight regiments of dragoons, a company of miners, and a company of gunners, in all about 14,000 men. The place mounted 120 guns besides 8 mortars; and of ammunition, provisions, and money, there was no lack. For two long months the eyes of Europe were riveted on Namur. The flower of the British army served at this celebrated siege—in the trenches, in storming the deadly breach, and in erecting batteries which poured a continuous storm of balls and shells upon the doomed fortress. Special features of the present volume are the complete lists of nearly all the British infantry regiments engaged at this siege. These lists are taken from the Flanders Army List, 1694, an unique MS. at the British Museum, and some of these same lists having been corrected to September 1695, they afford an interesting, though melancholy, memorial of the promotions consequent on the great mortality among British officers at the siege in question. Frequent reference is made in the footnotes throughout this volume of officers who were killed and wounded at the storming of the counterscarp and breach of Terra Nova, Namur, by the grenadiers of the British regiments on the memorable 20th August 1695. Lord Cutts commanded and led the attack.

“Cutts, whose known worth no herald need proclaim,
His wounds and his own worth can speak his fame.”

Courthope's Regiment (17th Foot), with Mackay's Regiment supported the grenadiers, while Hamilton's (18th Foot) and Buchan's were in reserve. It was a march across “the valley of death,” and when the devoted band of grenadiers mounted the breach, nearly all their officers were either killed or wounded. The Colonel of the 17th Foot was killed, with several of his officers, and the Lieut.-Colonel desperately wounded. The breach was found untenable, and the stormers, who were being mown down by a terrible cross-fire, had to retire. It was at this critical juncture that Lord Cutts, who had been disabled by a shot in the head, perceived that the Bavarian contingent had succeeded in winning the glacis of the Coehorne, which position they obstinately maintained against the enemy. Calling for 200 volunteers Cutts despatched them to the assistance of the Bavarians. They were instructed to storm the palisades, enter the covered way, and if possible make a lodgment. The forlorn hope, headed by Lieut. Alexander Cockle of Mackay's regiment, succeeded in surmounting the palisades and beating the enemy back on the covered way turned their own guns upon them. The 17th, 18th (p. 31), Mackay's (Vol. III., p. 395) and Buchan's regiments gallantly seconded Cockle's efforts, and the covered way was not only gained but held. On this day the British lost 1,400 killed and wounded. The brunt of the loss fell upon the 18th Foot, viz., 12 officers killed, 13 wounded, 86 non-commissioned officers and men killed, and 185 wounded. King William, who had watched with considerable anxiety the results of the above enterprises, marked his approbation of the forward gallantry of the 18th Foot, in the second desperate attack on the Terra Nova, by conferring on this regiment the title of "The Royal Regiment of Foot of Ireland," together with the badge and motto of the Lion of Nassau encircled "Virtutis Namurcensis Præmium." For his gallantry in leading the attack on the Coehorne Lieut. Cockle received a present in money, and was appointed Captain of the Grenadier Company in Colonel James Ferguson's regiment, 15 September 1695 (p. 98). On 26 August (old style) Namur surrendered, and the garrison, reduced to 5,000 men, marched out with all the honours of war.

The capture of Namur greatly redounded to the credit of William III. and his army. It is true that the shameful surrender of Deinse, and Dixmude, to the French by the Governors of those towns, in July 1695, somewhat marred the success at Namur, but the balance of gain remained with the Allies. Brigadier-General O'Farrell, the Commandant of Deinse, was tried by a Court Martial and cassé avec infamie. His regiment (21st Fusiliers) was bestowed on Colonel Robert Mackay (p. 88). Dixmude, which was fairly well fortified and provisioned, was garrisoned by three Dutch battalions, one Danish, and five British regiments, viz.: Brewer's (12th Foot), Sir Jas. Lesley's (15th Foot), Sir Charles Graham's (Vol. III. p. 396), Lord Lorne's (p. 44), and a cavalry regiment (3rd Dragoons). Major-General Ellenberg, a Danish officer, commanded. Scarcely 24 hours had elapsed after the French had opened the trenches before Ellenberg beat a parley and called a council of war—a certain sign of weakness. He proposed a capitulation, and persuaded the majority of the officers to agree to the same. It is to the eternal credit of Major Robert Duncanson (Vol. III. p. 53), commanding Lord Lorne's Highland Regiment, and to the senior officer of the Queen's Dragoons, that they refused to give their adherence; but they were in the minority, and the next day the capitulation was signed by the Governor. It is recorded that the soldiers forming the garrison were greatly exasperated when required to lay down their colours, and arms, as prisoners of war. Numbers of the men broke their weapons. Lorne's Highlanders refused to surrender their colours, and tore them up. General Ellenberg was tried by a Court Martial and beheaded. Sir Charles Graham, and other officers who had signed the capitulation, were broke.

The Jacobite Conspiracy, known in history as "Sir George Barclay's Assassination Plot," was discovered, and frustrated, in January 1696, on the very eve of the day fixed for the diabolical design against the life of William III. Most of the conspirators were ex-officers of James II.'s late army, and as such, are fully noticed in the Introduction to Vol. II. (pp. xxii – xxiv). It only remains now to state that the Mr. Pendergrass (Prendergast) who was, in the first instance, concerned in said plot, and discovered the whole affair to the Earl of Portland, and even to the King in person, when aware of the desperate nature of the enterprise in which he had engaged himself, was handsomely rewarded. He was made a baronet, and the estate of Gort, in the county of Tipperary, was bestowed on him by Royal Warrant, dated 10 February 1696, and a year later he received a pension of £500 per annum. In 1704, Sir Thos. Prendergast was appointed Lieut.-Colonel to the Earl of Orrery's Regiment of Foot, and succeeded to the Colonelcy 24 February 1707. He fell at the head of his regiment at the battle of Malplaquet.

On 7th May 1696, William III. landed in Holland, and on the following day he signed many commissions at the Hague, one of which was the most extraordinary appointments ever known in the annals of war or peace. This particular Commission (p. 148) appointed a certain William Douglas to a captaincy in Colonel George Hamilton's Regt. of Scots Foot. There was nothing in the commission entry in question to excite comment or surprise, and the Editor was unable to give any annotation to a not uncommon name beyond the unsatisfactory word "untraced." But after the body of this volume had gone to press, the writer was happy enough to come across this officer's petition, dated in 1718, in the Calendar of Treasury Papers,* which runs as follows:—

"PETITION OF WILLIAM THERESA DOUGLAS TO THE LORDS OF THE TREASURY.

"Petitioner being daughter to Lieut.-Colonel John Douglas of General Hamilton's late Regt. of Foot, King William, in consideration of her father's service, did her the honour to be her god-father in Flanders and conferred on her his name, at the same time ordering her the pay of a captain, to educate and bring her up, which pay was accordingly allowed by the States of Holland, and a company reserved vacant in the above-said Regiment in her favour. Petitioner received the pay till the regiment was disbanded in Holland in 1714 at which time she was put on the establishment of half-pay, with the rest of the officers, and allowed as such till 24 December 1717. In the last session of Parliament was excluded from her half-pay. Lost her father who was ordered to Scotland upon the late Rebellion. Prays her future subsistence."

This petition was minuted:—

"7 August 1718. My Lords cannot advise anything against the Rules in the Act of Parliament."

Parliament could deprive this young lady of her "subsistence," but had no say over her military rank. Once a captain always a captain!

The abuse of "child commissions in the army" has been fully set forth by the Editor in an article he contributed to Notes and Queries, 30 November 1695, a copy of which article is reprinted in the Appendix to this volume (pp. 292 – 294). Apart from the aforesaid unique case of a female infant being granted a commission, three more authenticated instances of child commissions being bestowed by William III. have come to light since the article in question appeared in Notes and Queries. Henry and Edward Hawley, sons of Colonel Francis Hawley, who fell at Steinkirk, received commissions at the respective ages of nine and six years (Appendix p. 295); and William Lloyd, infant son of Lieut.-Colonel Wm. Lloyd, of the Princess Anne of Denmark's Regt. of Dragoons, was appointed Cornet to his father 30 March 1694 (p. 14).

Lord Galway had succeeded, in 1694, to the command of the contingent in Savoy and Piedmont, which William III. maintained in English pay, for the service of the Duke of Savoy. This contingent consisted of French refugee regiments, one of which was commanded by Lord Galway (p. 192), and Swiss mercenaries. The field officers' commissions in the Swiss regiments were signed by William III., but with one exception, * are not given in any of the Commission Entry Books at the War Office or Public Record Office. A side light, however, is thrown on the British Contingent in Piedmont by the List entitled—"Estat de la Compagnie des Canoniers et Bombardiers Anglois qui ont esté en Piemont et à combien monte la paye de chacun par jour." This unique List is now printed for the first time (p. 122). The peace with Savoy, in 1696, enabled the French to bring a large additional force to Flanders. The British on the other hand, had to withdraw many regiments from the Low Countries this year, as a French invasion of England was expected. Under these exceptional circumstances it is not surprising that the Allies did their best to avoid a battle; though why the French pursued the same Fabian tactics it is difficult to understand, but it is very certain that the three French commanders in the field, De Boufflers, De Vaudemont, and De Villeroi, were men of a different stamp to Marshal Luxembourg, who had died on 4 January 1695, aged 67.

* Commission in favour of — Marcourt:—"Nous reposans pleinement sur votre fidélité, Courage et bonne Conduite vous faisons par ces presentes Major de notre Regiment Suisse, commandé par—Saconay, comme aussi Capitaine d'une Compagnie dans le mesme Regiment. Kensington, 1 December 1695 (M.E.B. 4)."

In February 1697, the King appointed Colonel John Gibson to be Commander-in-Chief of the expedition to Newfoundland. This expedition was rendered necessary by the head-way the French had made in that colony. In order to protect the interests of the British colonists, Gibson's regiment (Vol. III. p. 381) and a Train of Artillery under Colonel Michael Richards (p. 170) were despatched to Newfoundland. Among the officers who volunteered for this service was Captain Richard Hill, who had earned for himself an unenviable notoriety, in December 1692, by his murder of Mountfort the actor, under exceptionally disgraceful circumstances. Hill fled the country after committing the fatal deed, but had subsequently served as a volunteer in Flanders, under his former colonel (Erle), and had acquitted himself well. Lord Macaulay has handed down Hill to posterity as "a profligate captain in the army," and Mountfort's biographer, in the Dictionary of National Biography, has improved on Macaulay's description by styling Hill "a known ruffler and a cut-throat." Both these sweeping assertions are somewhat hyperbolic, as Hill was only sixteen years of age when he ran the unfortunate actor through the body. This fact is amply proved by certificates found by the writer at the Public Record Office, copies of which are given in the Appendix (pp. 297, 298). Gibson's expeditionary force returned to England in the autumn of 1697, but two companies of his regiment were left at St. John's under the Lieut.-Colonel during the succeeding winter, and suffered much from the severity of the climate.

Returning to Flanders, the cock-pit of Europe, we find a new actor entering the military arena. This was the famous Marshal Catinat, whose victory over the Duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene at Massiglia, in 1693, has been previously recorded (Vol. III. p. xx). On 5 May 1697 the important town of Ath was invested by Catinat with 40,000 men. De Villeroi covered the besieging army with a united force of 120,000 men. William's army was so immeasurably inferior in point of numbers, that the Allies deemed it impracticable to relieve Ath, and this fortress surrendered, with the honours of war, on 28 May. The French now determined to make a dash for Brussels; but the Allies had scouts on the look-out who at once reported the move of the French covering army from Lessines towards Enghien. The Allies were encamped at Genappe, and the distance from that place to Brussels is about the same as from Enghien to Brussels. William grasped the situation at once, and immediately set his army in motion along the one road open to him. The troops marched all night, and by ten the next morning had occupied the camp of Anderlecht, which by nature and art effectually barred the road to the capital. Shortly after the arrival of the Allies at Anderlecht the French appeared on the heights and on the Assche road, and saw they were too late—Brussels was saved.

It is worthy of record that on 23 April 1697 a commission as ensign in the Coldstream Guards (p. 173) was bestowed on Richard Steele, the future brilliant essayist and dramatist. This shining light had, after leaving Oxford, enlisted as a private in a marching regiment, but his versatile talents attracted the attention of Lord Cutts, who obtained him a commission. Sir Richard Steele served for about ten years as a commissioned officer, and if he had not an opportunity of using his sword in the service of his country, he showed he could use it to some purpose in defence of his honour, as he fought a duel in Hyde Park in 1700, and his opponent was dangerously wounded.

On 11 September 1697, Peace was signed at Ryzwick. Reference has already been made to the wholesale reductions in the British Army which took place after the Peace.

Three regiments of horse, four regiments of dragoons, twenty-nine battalions of infantry, and two of marines, were disbanded (Appendix, pp. 301, 302). This was not enough for Parliament. A Disbanding Bill was passed in January 1699, which fixed the strength of the Army in England at the low figure of 7,000 men, and required that all the foreign troops then in British pay should be disbanded. In consequence of this Bill the five regiments of French refugees on the Irish Establishment (Appendix, p. 303,) were disbanded, and all the Dutch regiments were sent back to Holland in March 1699. The Artillery Peace Train and the four marine regiments were also disbanded.

Lord Macaulay has graphically described the stoicism with which William III. met the demands of an inexorable British Parliament with regard to disbanding the major portion of the standing army; and he has also told us how the soldier-King stooped to ask one favour from his ungrateful Commons, viz., that the Dutch Foot Guards, which had been domiciled in England since the Revolution, and had fought with éclat in all William's battles, might be excepted from the Act ordering all foreign troops to quit the kingdom. The Royal request was refused, and the Dutch Guards, with all their belongings left England for ever. A contemporary broadside describes the feelings of these Dutch soldiers on leaving London :—

LAMENT OF THE DUTCH GUARDS ON LEAVING
ENGLAND IN 1699.*

“ Must we, the battalion of chosen Dutch skaters,
Be drove by a law from your wives and your daughters,
And kick'd from the Crown like a parcel of traitors?
Must we that redeem'd you from Pop'ry and slav'ry,
And made you all free in the use of your knav'ry,
Be recompensed thus for our courage and brav'ry?
O, England! O, England! 'Tis very hard measure;
And things done in haste are repented at leisure.”

The old Scots Brigade, and three additional Scottish regiments (one of which was the Cameronians), were taken into Dutch pay from 12 December 1697, after each battalion had been reduced from 13 to 10 companies (Appendix, p. 303). With the exception of the Cameronians, none of the six aforesaid regiments have survived to the present time. Lord Strathnaver's and George Hamilton's corps, which returned to Scotland in 1699 for a short term, reverted to the Dutch Service in 1701, and were disbanded after the Peace of Utrecht. The three original regiments of the old fighting Scots Brigade (Appendix, p. 303) continued in the Dutch Service and Pay from December 1697 to the time of their final disbandment in 1782. We therefore bid adieu to them in the present volume, as no commissions for the regiments in question appear in the English Commission Entry Books after the Peace of Ryswick. The last page of their eventful history, in the service of the Dutch Republic, reflects the highest honour on the officers of the Brigade who remembered that they were British subjects, and owed primary allegiance to their own Sovereign, and not to a foreign Government which had cancelled the conditions of service under which the Brigade had been originally lent to Holland. The following anecdote, illustrative of the new Scots Brigade raised in Edinburgh out of the ashes of the old Brigade, may not be considered out of place here, as it helps to brighten the military history of the far past:—

“At Gibraltar, on one occasion, the General [O'Hara] ordered a regiment, which had newly arrived, to replace another about to embark on different service, to be inspected by several of the field officers—each private to step six paces in front of the line for that purpose. The corps thus to be scrutinised was a battalion of the Scots Brigade, which had been raised in Edinburgh in 1794 by the late Lieut.-General Ferrier, and of such a diminutive size were the men that they were called the ‘Garvies’ by the inhabitants. Major Campbell [35th Regiment] was one of the inspectors, and he patiently endured the tedious process of over-hauling this very indifferent sample of his countrymen, till at length one peculiarly coarse-visaged, short, cross-made, elderly little fellow stepped out his six paces. Unable longer to contain himself, and running up to the soldier, he stooped to the level of the ill-favoured ‘militaire,’ then grinning, or rather girling, in his face he bawled out, 'Well, doubly d——n me! (his usual exclamation) but you are an ugly ——! my dear.' Then turning to a fellow officer (Lieut.-General Ainslie) who stood by, 'He seems conglomerated, my dear; from con and glomeo, as we used to say at St. Andrew's, my dear!' " *

It has been noted as a curious fact that the first service of the old 94th Regiment (Scots Brigade) was to take the Cape of Good Hope from the Dutch. This corps was disbanded in 1818.

Returning to the year 1699, we find that although the army in England was limited to a total of 7,000 men, the King was allowed to keep a much larger body of troops on the Irish Establishment (p. 296). The Parliament of Scotland maintained for that kingdom, at the close of 1699, an army of about 7,000 men. In January 1698, Parliament sanctioned half-pay being granted to the disbanded officers "till they should be otherwise provided for." And the credit of the nation necessitated the settlement of the arrears of pay due to many regiments and soldiers of all ranks. Parliamentary Committees tackled these claims and inspected lists of disbanded officers furnished by the Paymaster-General (Journals of the House of Commons, Vol. XII., pp. 564-581), who claimed half-pay. As the late Act disqualified all officers "who were not His Majesty's natural born subjects" from serving in the army, or receiving half-pay, scores of foreign officers who had served in the British army applied to Parliament for letters of naturalization, and their petitions were duly granted. This circumvention of a hard and fast Act preserved to the British army some of her most experienced commanders (p. 297). A divergence from the Act regarding half-pay had likewise to be made in the case of certain officers who had left the army prior to the treaty of Ryswick, and by long and meritorious service were entitled to receive the same advantages as the disbanded officers. Here is a case brought before Parliament under date of 13 April, 1699 :—

“Petition of Captain Wm. Conn, late of Puizar's regiment, who served over twenty years in Tangier, England, Ireland, Flanders, and the Straits, in 1695, where he was deprived of his sight, and so was forced to quit the regiment for his recovery. Prays to be included in general list of officers to receive half-pay.”*

Parliament ordered this deserving officer to be added to the said list.†

The widows of officers who were killed or died of wounds received in His Majesty's service were pensioned (Appendix, pp. 289, 290). These annuities terminated at the King's death.

The visit of the Tsar Peter to England, in the spring of 1698, resulted in several British officers entering the Russian army. Among those who elected to return with Peter was Major Leonard Van der Stamm, a Dutch artilleryist, who had served for several years with the British Artillery (p. 16). Curious to say this officer was not chosen for his knowledge of gunnery, but as “a specialist in ship designing.”‡ Special mention must also be made of Lieutenant Peter Best, of the Scots Brigade (p. 158), whose company in Colonel Walter Colyear's regiment was reduced in 1697 and the officers placed on half-pay. The Tsar having leave from King William to take any of his subjects into the Russian service, held out monetary inducements to such officers as should enter his (the Tsar's) employment. Lieut. Best transferred his services to Russia, where he attained distinction in civil life, and was father of the renowned Grand Chancellor of whom an historian gives the following account :—§

“Alexey Bestucheff, the Grand Chancellor to the Empress Elisabeth, was the boldest and the ablest man of all that attended the Imperial Court. He governed at once the Empress, her favourite, and the Minister of State ; he in a manner directed the affairs of the Empire both at home and abroad. He was the son of a Scottish officer, named Best, whom Peter the Great brought with him at his return from England. Best, which in the Russian language signifies beast, is a horrid term of abuse when applied to a man or woman, therefore Peter familiarly told him to change it. 'If your Majesty does not approve of my name,' said the lieutenant, 'I beseech you to alter it to your own mind?' 'Well, then,' returned the Tsar, 'let it be Bestucheff, and thou art a Russian at once.'"

Fortune's wheel was less favourable to Fireworker Abraham Kennesby (p. 170)) who, with some other British gunners, returned with the Tsar to Russia. After serving at the siege and battle of Narva, in 1700, these same gunners were taken prisoners by Charles XII. and suffered a long and cruel imprisonment in Swedish prisons (Appendix, p. 300). The piping times of peace deprived England of the eminent services of Major John Sigismund Schlund, of the Artillery Peace Train (p. 200), who, in 1698, was appointed Commander of the Artillery to the Elector of Brandenburg, with the rank of Colonel (p. 202, note 1). A few months prior to this appointment Colonel Jacob Richards, the Third Engineer of England, had, with the King's permission, transferred his services to the Venetian Republic, where he was appointed General of the Artillery.

The causes which led to the war of the Spanish succession are too well known to recapitulate. Suffice it to say that, in the spring of 1701, war trembled in the balance. In May 1701, the new English Parliament passed an Act for increasing the Army, and eleven infantry regiments, including the Royal Scots, which consisted of two battalions, were brought up to war strength, and despatched to Flanders. Commissions in the new companies added to these regiments were given to reformed, i.e., half-pay officers (pp. 251-254). Four new regiments of ten companies each were raised for the Irish establishment (pp. 255-261). Two companies were raised in Scotland for the security of the Highlands (p. 254) after three Scots regiments had been sent to Flanders. When it became apparent, at the close of 1701, that war was inevitable, and its declaration by Great Britain only a question of weeks, Parliament voted a large sum for the increase of both the Army and Navy. The Royal Dragoons received an augmentation of two troops (p. 268), and were despatched to Flanders with other cavalry corps which were also brought up to war strength. Nine infantry battalions in the Low Countries were again augmented (pp. 273, 274), and regiments on the home roster were increased from ten to twelve companies each. Nine regiments of infantry and six of marines were ordered to be raised in February 1702, but none of these new battalions were complete at the time of King William's death. As regards the officers composing Colonel Meredith's and Colonel Coote's regiments the lists were signed by Major-General Erle, and given to his Majesty, who approved of the same (pp. 282-284). The field officers alone of the remaining thirteen new regiments received commissions from William III., which were dated 12 February 1702 (pp. 279-281). Of the above fifteen regiments eleven are still represented in the British army, beginning from the 28th Regiment of the Line and ending with the 39th Foot—the 38th Foot being excepted as it was not raised till 25 March 1705 (Appendix, p. 299). The precedence of the 38th Foot is due to the fact that it was raised in England, whereas the 39th Foot was raised in Ireland, and it was a hard and fast rule that "an Irish regiment shall have rank from the day it comes upon the English establishment."* The same rule held good with Scottish regiments.†

On Sunday 8 March 1702, William III. passed to his rest. The leadership of the British army fell to a born leader of men—Marlborough.

Mr. Salisbury, of the Public Record Office. In preparing the Index the Editor has, for the fourth time, to acknowledge the great help he has received from Mr. F. J. Mackney, late of the MS. Department, British Museum. The phonetic spelling in vogue throughout the period traversed makes an Index of proper names peculiarly harassing and tedious; the work has been undertaken with a fixed determination to give an intelligible rendering of names cruelly mangled by Civil Service clerks of the 17th century, whose unfettered orthography is but too apparent in the text.

* In 1605 the English companies in the Service of the States of the United Provinces were formed into four Regiments, and so continued until 1655, when they were reduced into one Regiment, which was disbanded by the States-General in Jan. 1665, for refusing to take the primary oath of allegiance to them. The officers of this Regt. having returned to England were, with other British officers and men, who had been disbanded in Holland for refusing the same oath, re-formed into a British Regt. by Charles II., 31 May 1665, and styled the Holland Regt. of Foot—the present Bufs (East Kent Regt.).

* From the List given in the Flanders Army List for 1694, corrected to Sept. 1694. This Regt. was disbanded in 1697, and the officers placed on half-pay in March 1698.

¹ Appointed Capt. in above Regt. 1 Aug. 1693 (Vol. III., p. 337). In 1699 was sent out to Darien by the African and India Co. of Scotland to regulate their affairs there. On his arrival at Darien, on the 2nd of Feb. 1700, Campbell found the colony in a very unsettled state, and menaced by the Spaniards. With 200 colonists and about 40 Indians, Campbell took the field, and after a three days' march through an impassable country he came upon the enemy, who were about 1,600 strong, at Toubocanti, and immediately attacked them with such resolution that the Spaniards were defeated, and compelled to fly. Returning to Darien, Campbell found that five Spanish warships had arrived in the harbour. The colonists held a council of war, and determined to capitulate against Campbell's urgent protest. He, with a few faithful followers, embarked on board a small sloop and sailed for Scotland, where they arrived in July 1700. The Darien Company presented Campbell with a gold medal specially struck in his honour (Tancred's Historical Record of Medals, pp. 35, 36). This medal is still in the possession of the family. On 24 June 1701, Capt. Alex. Campbell was appointed Capt. of a Cy. added to Col. Ferguson's Regt. for the security of the Highlands, and was made Bt. Lt.-Col. 29 March 1703. On 19 Aug. 1704 was awarded 200*l.*, due him for arrears of pay, by the Scottish Parliament (Acts of the Parlt. of Scotland, Vol. XI., p. 1746). Served against the Jacobites in the Rebellion of 1715. Commanded one of the six Indep. Companies in the Highlands, raised in 1729, which, ten years later, was incorporated into the Black Watch (Records 42nd Foot).

³ This officer's name is omitted in the MS. List, but the Comn. of Lt. Jas. Chisholm says, "Lieut. to the Cy. whereof Capt. Robt. Campbell is Capt." (see Vol. III., p. 376). The part taken in the Glencoe massacre by this officer, and his impeachment by the Scottish Parliament in 1695, are well known. He left the Regt. 2 Aug. 1696.

Being still desirous to serve in the army, he had an offer of a Company in Brigdr. Meredyth's Regt., and he joined that regt. in Brabant, where he was presented to the Company, at the head of which he marched over the Lines, but the other Captains pressed the Brigadier to put a stop to his Commission by reason he could not consent to come in as youngest Captain since he was to take rank as Captain from the date of his Comm. in the Guards, wherefore he served all the rest of the campaign as a Volunteer." War Office MS.

* This List is printed in the Cleveland Notes, pp. 144-146. The "Peace Train," established by Rl. Warrant 21 May 1698, was broke by Rl. Warrant dated 30 Jan. 1699. Certain yearly allowances were given to the officers and others of above train, by Rl. Warrant of 14 Feb. 1699, to commence from 1 Feb. 1699. M. E. B. 3.

¹ Johann Sigismund Schlund. This distinguished soldier and artillerist joined the Brandenburg Artillery as a gunner in 1670. Promoted corporal in 1672 and sergeant in 1679. Was transferred as Lieut. in 1685 to the 12th Infantry Regt. "Markgraf Philipp Wilhelm." Promoted 1st Lieut. same year. Made Staff Captain in 1689. Transferred his services to the British Artillery in 1689, and served throughout William III.'s campaigns in Ireland and Flanders. (See his various Comms. in Vols. III. and IV.). Resigned his Comm. as Major of above Train in 1698, and was re-appointed to the Brandenburg army as Commander of the Artillery with rank of Colonel. Distinguished himself at the battle of Blenheim, and in the same year he constructed and commanded a battery of 30 guns at the siege of Lindau. In his report of this siege to Frederick I. of Prussia, Prince Leopold of Dessau, who commanded, especially mentions Colonel Schlund "who here gave quite extraordinary proofs of the results of the art of gunnery." In 1705 Col. Schlund was imprisoned "on account of suspicious correspondence with the Russian Court." Cashiered in 1707. It appears from Dr. Eugene Schuyler's Peter the Great (Vol. II., p. 75) that Charles XII. obliged Prussia to punish Col. Schlund "for giving the Tsar advice on the improvement of his artillery." Schlund now entered the Russian Army and attained the rank of Major-General. He died at Riga. Most of the above information has been obtained from the Berlin archives by Lieut.-Colonel Grierson, B.A., Military Attaché at Berlin.

* From the Lists given in M. E. B. 3 and M. E. B. 4. The Regts. in question were not completed until the accession of Queen Anne, and therefore all the officers, excepting the above-named field officers, received Comms. signed by Queen Anne and dated 10 Mar. 1702. The six Marine Regts. were disbanded in 1713, but on the accession of George I. the Infantry Regts. were increased, "and in consideration of the gallant and extensive services of the Marine Corps during the late war, Wills's (now 30th), Goring's (now 31st), and Bor's (now 32nd), were incorporated with the regiments of infantry of the line, and ranked according to the dates of their original formation in 1702" (Formation and Services of Marine Corps). The Foot Regts. commanded by Col. Stringer, Lord Mohun, and Sir Richard Temple were disbanded in 1713. All the above officers, excepting the Earl of Huntingdon, have been annotated under the dates of their former Comms.

It would seem that at first the above widows only received gratuities "granted by the king's Royal Bounty," but that at the close of the war (1697) these amounts became pensions, which mostly terminated at his Majesty's death in 1702.

CHILD COMMISSIONS IN THE ARMY.

(From Notes and Queries, 8th Series, Vol. VIII., Nov. 30, 1895.)

The abuse that crept into the Church, in early days, by the permitting child marriages was repeated in the early history of the British standing army by the granting commissions to children in the nursery. The latter crying evil made small headway at first, and was confined to the sons of eminently distinguished officers who had rendered valuable service to their king and country. But the abuse of privilege is difficult to check when it once gains a footing, and for a hundred years, viz., throughout the eighteenth century, the British army was hampered by, and encumbered with, a certain number of dummy officers, who enjoyed all the advantages and none of the hardships of their profession; until they were considered old enough to take over the military posts which were yawning to receive them.

So far as it can be ascertained, it was not till 1684 that a commission was granted to a child of tender years. On 3 May, 1684, Piercy Kirke, son of the well-known Col. Piercy Kirke, of the Queen's Regiment of Foot, familiarly known as "Kirke's Lambs," was commissioned ensign in the Duchess of York's Regiment, which his father had formerly commanded at Tangier. This "lambkin" as we may truly term him, was twelve months* old, and owed his commission to the valuable services of his father in various campaigns with the Moors. It was, in fact, a cheap way on the part of Charles II. of rewarding a brave soldier, but it established a very dangerous precedent. In the following reign, George, Lord Ettrick, an infant of eighteen months, was commissioned captain in the Royal Regiment of Foot, his commission bearing date 23 Oct. 1688. He was son and heir of the Earl of Dumbarton, a lieutenant-general in James II.'s army, and colonel of the Royals. Before passing on to other infantile soldiers we must glance at the future careers of Ensign Kirke and Capt. Lord Ettrick. The former appears as a captain in the list of his father's regiment in 1689, and it was not until he was the senior captain in his regiment that Kirke joined his corps for regimental duty. As a seasoned veteran of twenty-four years he became lieutenant-colonel of the Queen's, and commanded the same at Almanza, where he and most of his officers and men were taken prisoners. He purchased the colonelcy of the Queen's from Lord Portmore in 1710, and retained the same until his death, 1 Jan. 1741. Lord Ettrick (who, by the way, did not own a single foot of land in the district from which he derived his courtesy title) was an instance of "the captain crying for his pap" rather than that of "the major crying for his parrich," as within two months of his receiving the above commission he lost it by his father's following James II. to France and taking his son with him. It was not until 1715 that Lord Ettrick (then second Earl of Dumbarton) again appeared in the military arena, and this time it was as lieutenant-colonel of Col. Chas. Dubourgay's Regiment of Foot.

It was not to be expected that William III., a soldier of experience, would approve the granting of commissions to children, and we only find three authenticated instances of child commissions in his eventful reign. After the battle of Steinkirk, the company lately commanded by Lieut.-General Hugh Mackay, in the latter's own regiment of foot in the Scots Brigade, was given by the king to Hugh Mackay, son of the deceased, then a boy of twelve, out of respect to the memory of one of the bravest and best of men. Young Mackay's commission was dated at Gawen (sic), 1 Sept., 1692 (War Office Book, 1260). Capt. Hugh Mackay eventually became a major in the Dutch service, and died at Cambray in 1708. The next commission granted to a child was dated "Whitehall, 1 Jan. 1694," and the recipient was Charles Mordaunt,* who was appointed "ensign in the Earl of Monmouth's Regiment of Foot." The words "a child" are written in the margin of this commission entry in the MS. at the Record Office (Military Entry Book, Vol. III.), which establishes the fact of this officer's tender age. The Earl of Monmouth, better known afterwards as the brilliant Earl of Peterborough, had done yeoman's service for William III. both before and at the Revolution, and we may presume that the above child was the earl's grandson, who eventually succeeded as fourth Earl of Peterborough and second Earl of Monmouth. In 1698 the exigencies of the service required that Mordaunt's (late Lord Monmouth's) Regiment should be transformed into a marine corps, and accordingly Baby Mordaunt was recommissioned second lieutenant in Mordaunt Marines. After enjoying the emoluments of his rank for eight months, this regiment was disbanded and the officers placed on half-pay. But the accession of Queen Anne brought better times, and Mordaunt's was reconstituted a marine corps, and Baby Mordaunt was restored to full pay as a second lieutenant. After this date (1702) his name disappeared from the list. The probability is that he never joined the regiment, and resigned his commission when he found it convenient so to do. The third, and, apparently, last child commission given by William III. was dated "Hampton Court, 3 July, 1700," and appointed "Jas. Ferguson to be ensign to Col. Ferguson's company in the latter's regiment" (Warrant Book for Scotland, Vol. XVII.). This young gentleman, who had the honour of being appointed ensign in the Cameronians, commanded by his father, Col. Jas. Ferguson of Balmakellie, was a "four-year-old," having been born in 1696. He was an only son, and his father had served nearly a quarter of a century in the army, first in the Scots Brigade, and latterly as colonel of the Cameronians. Col. Ferguson was one of Dutch William's most trusted and experienced officers. He had fought under Mackay at Killiecrankie, and also rendered valuable service in the western Highlands, subsequently taking an active part on the fatal fields of Steinkirk and Landen, and was destined to gain fresh laurels under Marlborough at Schellenberg and Blenheim, where he commanded a brigade of infantry which bore the brunt of the fighting on the glorious 13 Aug. 1704. Had not death struck down this veteran commander the year after Blenheim, at the very time his expected promotion to the rank of major-general had almost become a fait accompli, he would have attained higher honours than those already bestowed on him by his sovereign. The little ensign was left an orphan at the age of nine, but his guardians looked well after his affairs, and among the Ferguson family papers are allusions to "our pupil's pay as ensign," and the following curious receipt:—†

* His age at death is given as 57 in the Funeral Book, Westminster Abbey, under date of 9 Jan., 1741 (Westr. Abbey Registers). Col. Davis, the historian of the Queen's Regiment, has overlooked the fact of the younger Kirke's age on receiving a commission, and credits him with fighting a duel with Beau Seymour in 1699, whereas it was Capt. George Kirke, of the Horse Guards, who fought the said duel.

SIR,—I have received six recruits from William Johnson, servitor to James Ferguson of Pitfour, to Brigadier Preston's regiment, which is raised by me for brigadier ferguson sone who is ensign of the above regiment.

W. DRUMMOND.

Edr 7th Apr., 1711.

The probability is that Ensign Ferguson joined his regiment for a short time, but did not attain higher rank. He acquired the estate of Kinmundy, in Aberdeenshire, where he resided until his death in 1777.

The reign of Queen Anne saw a great increase in "nursery officers;" but as the ages never appear in commission registers it is only by careful research in other quarters that we can trace these child commissions; and it may well be that the names given below form only a part of the actual number of favoured little ones. In 1706, when many new regiments were about to be raised, the Duke of Marlborough received numerous applications for commissions in the new levies. These applications were accompanied by recommendations from noblemen, statesmen, and officers of high rank.

* In 1696 another Chas. Mordaunt was appointed ensign in Col. Henry Mordaunt's (late Lord Monmouth's) Regiment, and eventually became lieutenant-colonel of the said corps. He was son of Lieut.-Col. Lewis Mordaunt, and so styles himself in an application to the Duke of Marlborough for promotion in 1706 (War Office MS.).

† "Records of the Clan and Name of Fergusson, or Ferguson," edited by Jas. Ferguson and Robt. Menzies Fergusson, Edinburgh, 1895.

Now Marlborough had set his face against commissions being given to children, and drew the line at sixteen as the earliest age for first commissions. Here is a case in point. "Mr. Carteret, a gentleman of fourteen years of age, is recommended by the Lord Chamberlain for a company in the new levies." This application bears the endorsement, "Too young," and so the application was refused. So far so good. But even Marlborough had to give way when royalty stooped to ask for commissions. "Ensign Strobe, Ensign La Meloniere, and Ensign Young Goodall, children, were ensigns in Col. Breton's Regiment and superseded by the Prince's order. To be provided for in the new levies. [Recommended by] His Royal Highness." Accordingly, Prince George of Denmark's wish was complied with, and the initial "M" after each of these three children's names told its own tale. We find William Strobe appointed an ensign in Lord Lovelace's Regiment in Ireland, La Meloniere appointed an ensign in Col. Roger Townshend's Regiment, and Young Goodall appointed an ensign in Sir Roger Bradshaigh's Regiment in Ireland. So much for interest. A paper at the Record Office, entitled, "List of the officers absent from the regiments in Spain and Portugal, 8 July 1709," sent by Robert Walpole, Secretary at War, to the Earl of Sunderland, Secretary of State, gives the names and regiments of absentee officers. In this list, surprisingly large considering England was then engaged on a war in the Peninsula, the following officers have the word "child" written after their names:—

Colonel Harrison's Regiment—Ensign Hartigan, child.
 Lord Barrymore's Regiment—Captain Hastings, child.
 Lord Barrymore's Regiment—Lient. Maxwell, child.
 Lord Barrymore's Regiment—Ensign Booth, child.
 Brigadier Elliott's Regiment—Ensign Inglis, child.
 Brigadier Elliott's Regiment—Ensign Elliott, child.

After the surrender of General Jas. Stanhope with his little army at Brihuega, in December, 1710, the Duke of Argyll was sent out to Spain as commander-in-chief, and one of the first abuses in his army that he set himself to redress was stopping commissions being given to children. It is surprising to find such a good soldier as Col. Wm. Stanhope (afterwards Earl of Harrington) writing from Barcelona to his brother Chas. Stanhope, in the following indignant strain:—

"I desire you will acquaint Major Cleiland that the Duke of Argyll has positively refused me making his son an ensign, his pretence is 'tis the ruin of the service to make children officers."—S. P. Spain.

But the abuse had taken too deep root, and was too popular with interested parties, to be crushed out in other quarters, and so the child commissions went on as before and increased apace. In an undated list of the Scots Greys, temp. Queen Anne (? 1713), appears "3 years old Agnew" as cornet to the lieutenant-colonel. Here we have a child who could scarce manage a rocking-horse appointed cornet in a crack cavalry regiment, drawing pay and possibly allowances for forage for two chargers! However anomalous the position of these child officers might be on the full-pay list of the army, it was still more anomalous on the half-pay list. For in the former case these children generally joined their respective regiments in course of time, and did good service (like the late Field Marshal Sir John Foster FitzGerald, who got his early commissions in the nursery and joined his regiment at the age of sixteen, in time of war, as a full-blown captain); but children placed on half-pay seldom or never returned to the active list. This was the case with "Lieut. Thos. Cuff, child; Ensigns Edmund Butler, twelve years old, and Chas. Cooley, twelve years old," all three of whom were placed on half-pay from Col. Edward Jones's Regiment of Foot, in 1712, and remained there for ever.

PARENTAGE OF LIEUT.-GENERAL HAWLEY.

(From Notes and Queries, 8th Series, Vol. IX, Feb. 15, 1896.)

(See 4th S. I. 75, 162.)

Sir Walter Scott threw down the gauntlet for English genealogists to take up when he put into print the idle rumour that General Hawley was an illegitimate son of George II. (Tales of a Grandfather). Several subsequent writers have proved the absurdity of this statement by pointing out that George II. was some years junior to Hawley (see article on the Barony of Hawley in the Genealogist, Vol. I pp. 161-163), but up to the present time Hawley has been left fatherless. Hawley has been honoured with a memoir in the Dict. of Nat. Biog., and though he never did anything heroic and was a complete failure as a general, yet it will fill a manifest void to tell the true story of his parentage, and also correct the mistakes made about his age in all previous memoirs.

On 21 Jan. 1683-4, a licence was granted to "Francis Hawley, of St-Martin's-in-the-Fields, Middlesex, gent., bachelor, 30, and Judith Hughes, of same, spinster, 25, at her own disposal, to marry at St. Magnus, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, or St. Bennet, Paul's Wharf, London" (London Marriage Licences). This Francis Hawley was a lieutenant in the 1st Foot Guards, and had just returned from Tangiers, where he had seen much service as first lieutenant of Capt. Bowes's Grenadier Company. As a reward for his services he was appointed Captain of Grenadiers of the 1st Foot Guards on 20 April 1684, and did good service at the battle of Sedgemoor in the following year. In July 1685, Capt. the Hon. John Berkeley, of the 1st Foot Guards, was appointed colonel of a newly raised regiment of dragoons (now known as the 4th Hussars), and his friend Fras. Hawley was appointed major of the said regiment. At the Revolution, Major Hawley was appointed lieutenant-colonel of Berkeley's Dragoons, which were then styled "Princess Anne of Denmark's Regiment of Dragoons," and on 10 May 1692, was made brevet-colonel. He commanded his regiment (in the absence of Lord Fitzharding) at the fatal battle of Steinkirk, where he was killed. He died intestate, and left his widow and four children in very straitened circumstances. William III. gave Col. Hawley's second son, Edward, a commission as cornet in his father's late regiment, which commission bore date "Lembecq, 1 Augt. 1692" (War Office Book, 1260). Edward Hawley was barely six years old when he was appointed cornet in a crack dragoon regiment, and his commission adds another to the list of "Child Commissions in the Army" (8th S. VIII. 421, 498). After stating his age it is not surprising to hear that Cornet Edward Hawley was not promoted lieutenant until 25 June, 1706. But we must pass on now to Mrs. Judith Hawley and her other three children. Her gallant husband was half brother to Brigadier-General (afterwards General the Right. Hon.) Thos. Erle, who was one of the most distinguished officers of his time. General Erle commanded two infantry regiments at the time we write of, and was in great favour with William III. This accounts for the latter giving a commission dated 10 Jan. 1694, to Mrs. Judith Hawley's eldest son, Henry, as ensign in Brigadier-General Thos. Erle's Regiment (now known as the 19th Foot), then serving in Flanders. Supposing Col. Francis Hawley's eldest son to have been born in January 1685, this ensign would be barely nine in January, 1694.

It is impossible to say why Henry's younger brother should have been honoured with a commission nearly eighteen months previously, but we may naturally suppose that the bereaved widow, in the first days of her sorrow, shrank from the thought of her eldest son being in his father's profession. Be this as it may, she changed her mind later on, as is proved by the petition of Mrs. Judith Hawley to the king, stating that "her husband, Col. Francis Hawley, was killed at Steinkirk, leaving her in charge of four children, with no other fortune but the hopes of His Majesty's royal favour, which he had been graciously pleased to promise to the petitioner's brother Major-General Erle.... petitioner by her endeavours to fit her children for His Majesty's service has engaged herself in great difficulties" (Treasury Papers, under date 11 Oct. 1699). The immediate outcome of the above petition was a gratuity of "40*l*. to Mrs. Judith Hawley, widow of Col. Fras. Hawley, killed at Steinkirk," under the king's warrant (Warrants for Pay and Contingencies, 20 Nov. 1697 to 24 June 1700). Whether this gratuity was given yearly does not appear. On 10 March 1702, Ensign Henry Hawley was appointed ensign in Sir Richard Temple's newly raised regiment of foot. Four years later we find him promoted captain in his father's old dragoon regiment, then commanded by the Earl of Essex. His commission bore date 27 May 1706. In the following month his brother Edward, the before-mentioned cornet, was appointed lieutenant to his elder brother's troop. Capt. Henry Hawley's rapid rise in the army and subsequent career are well known. It only remains, therefore, to give a couple of extracts from two wills now at Somerset House, which confirm the above statements regarding General Hawley's parentage. In the will of Gen. Thos. Erle, of Charborough, Dorset, made 16 May 1717, and proved (P.C.C.) 7 Dec. 1720, we find the following: "I give to my brother Henry Hawly (sic), esquire, the sum of 100*l*., and to each and every of the children of my brother Francis Hawly, esquire, deceased, viz., Henry, Edward, and Anne, the sum of 50*l*." The Henry Hawley, Esq., named in the above will, was for many years lieutenant-colonel of General Erle's regiment of foot, but for some years previous to General Erle's death had held the appointment of lieutenant-governor of the town and fort of Kinsale, where he died in 1724. His will, dated 23 Jan. 1723, and proved (P.C.C.) by his nephew Capt. Edward Hawley, the residuary legatee, 8 Sept. 1724, has this clause: "I give and devise unto my nephew Colonel Henry Hawley my right title and interest in Sterminster [Sturminster], in the county of Dorset, wherein I have an estate, and moreover I give and remit unto him the said Henry Hawley all the sums of money and debts he owes me." It is noteworthy that in these two wills, legacies are left to Henry's younger brother Edward. The latter, who attained the rank of captain in his father's old dragoon regiment, evidently predeceased his brother Henry, who died at Portsmouth 23 March 1759, as on 18 March 1762, Miss Anne Hawley, then resident in London, was served heir-general to her brother Lieut-General Henry Hawley.

THE MURDER OF MOUNTFORT THE ACTOR.

(From Notes and Queries, 8th Series, Vol. X., July 4, 1896.)

(See 1st S. II. 516; 5th S. VIII. 231.)

Lord Macaulay tells us that Capt. Richard Hill, the murderer of Wm. Mountfort, the actor, was "a profligate captain in the army"; and Mountfort's Biographer in the Dic. of Nat. Biog. describes Hill as "a known ruffler and a cut-throat." Both these sweeping assertions are, to say the least of them, somewhat hyperbolic. Hill was only sixteen years of age when he ran the unfortunate actor through with his sword, in Howard Street, Strand, on 9 December 1692. Lord Mohun, who was Hill's accomplice and an accessory after the fact, was seventeen, and this point went in his favour when he was tried by his peers for murder. But no one has, heretofore, ever made any excuse for Hill, who lived to repent and to amend his ways, which cannot be said for Lord Mohun, who, five years subsequent to the above murder, was again arraigned for manslaughter. Curious to say, Mohun's victim on this latter occasion was Capt. William Hill, of the Coldstream Guards, who was stabbed in a drunken brawl at a tavern near Charing Cross, in September 1697.

At the age of twelve Richard Hill was appointed a subaltern in Viscount Lisburne's newly-raised regiment of foot. He served in the Irish campaign, and owing to the mortality in his regiment from fever and losses in action, he obtained command of a company when he was only fifteen. We may conclude that Lord Lisburne's regiment was rather a fast corps, and a bad school as regards morals for a very young officer, for we find the inspecting officer at Dundalk Camp, in December 1689, sending the following confidential report to William III. relative to Lord Lisburne's regiment: "Le Colonel s'en mette fort peu et avec cela d'un humeur extravagant; qui aussi prend tous les jours plus de vin qu'il ne peut [sic] porter." On 21 March 1692, Hill exchanged with Capt. Vincent Googene, of Col. Thos. Erle's regiment of foot (Military Entry Book, Vol. II., H O. Series). By this exchange Hill found himself in command of the grenadier company in a crack infantry regiment. This fact was a little trying for a youth of his age, and the society of an unlicked cub like young Lord Mohun had a bad effect on Hill's character. He also had the misfortune to have money at his disposal; and it came out in evidence, at Lord Mohun's trial, that Hill's scheme for carrying off Anne Bracegirdle, the well-known actress, was to cost him 50*l*. The fair actress was rescued as she was being forcibly hurried into the coach by the soldiers whom Hill had hired for the occasion. Frustrated in his villainy, young Hill dismissed his military hirelings. "Begone! I have done with you," cried this veteran centurion, in a tone which Jonathan Wild might have adopted when he dismissed his myrmidons. Unfortunately Hill stayed behind with Lord Mohun, and their brains, overheated by wine, to which in the case of the former was added mad jealousy against Mountfort, a supposed favoured rival in the fair actress's affections, devised the scheme of murder, which Hill carried into effect the same night. Hill escaped after committing the crime, and nothing further is recorded of him by the historian. But in the cellars of the Public Record Office is a MS. petition to Queen Anne, which runs as follows:—

"To the Queen's most Excellent Majestie.

"The humble petition of Captain Richard Hill.

"Showeth that your Petitioner at the age of sixteen, after four years' service in Ireland and Flanders, under the command of Lieut.-General Erle, was unhappily drawn into a quarrel with Mr. Mountfort wherein he had the misfortune to give him a mortal wound, for which unadvised act your Petitioner has humbled himself before God these eleven years past, and since his misfortune went volunteer with Col. Gibson to Newfoundland, who has given a character of your Petitioner's behaviour there as Lieut.-General Erle has of his carriage and conduct in Ireland and Flanders, as appears by the certificates herewith annexed.

"May it therefore please your most Sacred Majestie, in consideration of your Petitioner's past services, and in compassion to his youth, to extend your Royal mercy to your Petitioner for a crime to which he was betrayed by the heat and folly of youth, that he may thereby be enabled to serve your Majestie and his country, as his earnest desire is, to the last drop of his blood.

"And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c."

Only one of the two certificates annexed to the above petition, need be given here, although both are equally favourable :—

“Whereas Capt. Richard Hill was under my command during the late Irish war, and a volunteer with me in Flanders, I must needs give him this character that he behav'd himself on all occasions as a man of honour, and really with more courage and conduct than from one of his years could have been expected. For he was but twelve years old when he came into the army, and but sixteen when his misfortune hap'ned, which is eleven years since. Now the great concern for his misfortune, and his earnest desire to serve her Majesty again, even in any post, will I hope move her compassion and mercy in obtaining his freedom which I am ready to certify to her Majesty whenever 'tis thought convenient.

“THO. EARLE.”

Hill had friends at court to plead for him, as witness the following :—

“A Memorial for the Rt. Hon. Sir Chas. Hedges, Secretary of State.

“That his Grace the Duke of Somerset has promised to call for Captain Hill's petition in the first Cabinet Council, and the Lord President has promised to speak to both. Therefore your Honour is most humbly desired to have the said Captain's petition and certificates in readiness to lay before her Majesty for the more effectual obtaining of her Royal mercy.”

There is reason to believe that Hill was pardoned. In Recommendations for Commissions in the New Levies in 1706 (War Office MS.), the name of Capt. Richard Hill appears in a list of officers recommended by the Duke of Ormonde.

COL. GIBSON'S CERTIFICATE IN FAVOUR OF CAPTAIN RICHARD HILL, LATE OF LIEUT.-GENERAL EARLE'S REGIMENT OF FOOT.*

“This is to certify that Captain Hill by Lieut.-General Earle's recommendation went under my command to Newfoundland [in 1697] in hopes of meeting his Majesty's mercy and serving as a volunteer all that expedition. I think myself obliged in justice to give him this character of behaving himself always very honourably, much like a soldier and gentleman. He mist (sic) no occasion to signalise his valour, nor did he slip any opportunity to show his zeal for the service. I do not in the least doubt but that if her Majesty was truly made sensible of his behaviour, whilst under my command, her Majesty would be graciously pleased to extend her mercy to him for a crime committed in his very youth and so long since. This I do not only give under my hand, but will at any time appear to satisfy her Majesty on his behalf.”

THE SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE REGIMENT.

(From The Army and Navy Gazette, Aug. 14, 1897.)

SIR,—The absence of any records giving the earliest services of this distinguished regiment may account for an apparent error as to the date of its raising. The tradition is that this regiment was raised at Lichfield in 1702, being one of the batch of regiments raised by order of William III. three weeks before his death. In the Home Office Military Entry Books, 1702–1706, now at the Public Record Office, appears a list of “Commissions for a regiment of foot to be forthwith raised for our Service, commanded by Colonel Luke Lillingston, dated at St. James’s, 25 March 1705.” The last-named date is undoubtedly the real date of raising of the old 38th Foot. In the Records of the South Staffordshire Regiment (pamphlet), printed at Gibraltar in 1887, this corps is said to date its existence from February 13, 1702, and the same date is given in the short summary of its services in Records and Badges of Every Regiment in the British Army, published a few years since. But there is no trace whatever of “Lillingston’s Foot” in the Commission Entry Books from February 1702, to March 24, 1705, or anywhere else. Luttrell appears to be the sole authority for the assertion that Colonel Lillingston was to have a regiment in February, 1702, and this writer is by no means to be relied on, his “diary” being largely composed of on dits and club gossip. Lillingston was certainly entitled to have a regiment given him in 1702, as he had previously commanded two successive regiments in the West Indies, the last of which died a natural death after the peace of Ryswick. It is a well-known fact that there are certain of our old cavalry and infantry regiments, which were disbanded in one reign and re-formed in another, with precedence given to the re-embodied corps as if there had been no breaks in the continuity of their respective services. The 5th and 7th Dragoons (5th Lancers and 7th Hussars) and 34th Foot are notable examples of this fact. But “Lillingston’s Foot,” raised in March 1705 was not a reformed regiment at all. It is true that the date of this colonel’s commission is given as February 13, 1702, in the Succession of Colonels printed at the end of old Army Lists, but if this commission in question was not antedated to meet the requirements of the Service, which is quite possible, it may be considered as one of the many errors with which the old printed Army Lists teem.
